Virtual performances

?Virtual performances' are performing arts productions in which interactive technology and virtual spaces are used to mediate or augment interactions among performers, between performers and the performing space, or between performers and the audience. A wide range of virtual performances can be enacted, depending on artistic intentions and the modes of technology integration. Technology-enhanced interactions are generally distinguished by the way they facilitate connections among one or several physical spaces, among different virtual spaces, or combinations of virtual and physical spaces.