Motivation

- Current generations in Europe lost touch with the post-war generation whose aspirations led ultimately to the European Union as we know it
- We go back to the Fifties, exploring the fears, concerns, hopes and dreams of the citizens in Europe, East & West, North & South
- In attempting to present the visual identity of the Fifties in Europe, we showcase best practices in user engagement with Europeana

Transport & Travel

The 1950s mark the start of the golden age of mass tourism. As the first jet airplanes brought transcontinental traveling within reach, car constructors launched some of their most iconic models, while vespas, motorcycles and even motorized three wheelers provided the ultimate freedom to the more adventurous globetrotter. Browse these sets of Europeana images and label what you see – your tags will help guide vintage photography to our 1950s gems!

Highlights

Hi, I'm John Balean. Although I studied to be a photographer, I've spent most of my life licensing other photographers' images at TopFoto, one of the world's largest press photo archives. In this online course for the EU project Kaleidoscope, I'm going to show you some of the processes that went in to build a 1950s photo feature and challenge you to create your own, replicating the 1950s techniques in a 21st century setting. So the 1950s was the end of the Golden Age of photojournalism and it's not just because of the famous photographers that were active in the decade, but also because of the magazines that offered space to the photo feature, allowing these great photographers a platform to exhibit their work. Most of you will be familiar

This was a topic very much at the core of what was going on in the 1950s. It was the postwar period after the the second world war and for the first people realized that the means to total annihilation were at their fingertips. So we see that the antinuclear movement was getting organized.

They were putting on sittings, they were protesting in the streets.

In this first picture you see how a protester is forcibly removed from a site in Swaffham, in Norfolk England. It was a site that was secretly being developed into a missile base that was going to be jointly operated by the UK and by the US, with one of them in charge of the operation and facilities of site and the other one had the power to actually press the button if, one day, it would come to a missile launch. Ecology too, was very much part of the debate of the 1950s.

Especially since it was a period of the Europeana: a community empowering the cultural heritage sector in its digital transformation

Julia Fallon / Ariadna Matas

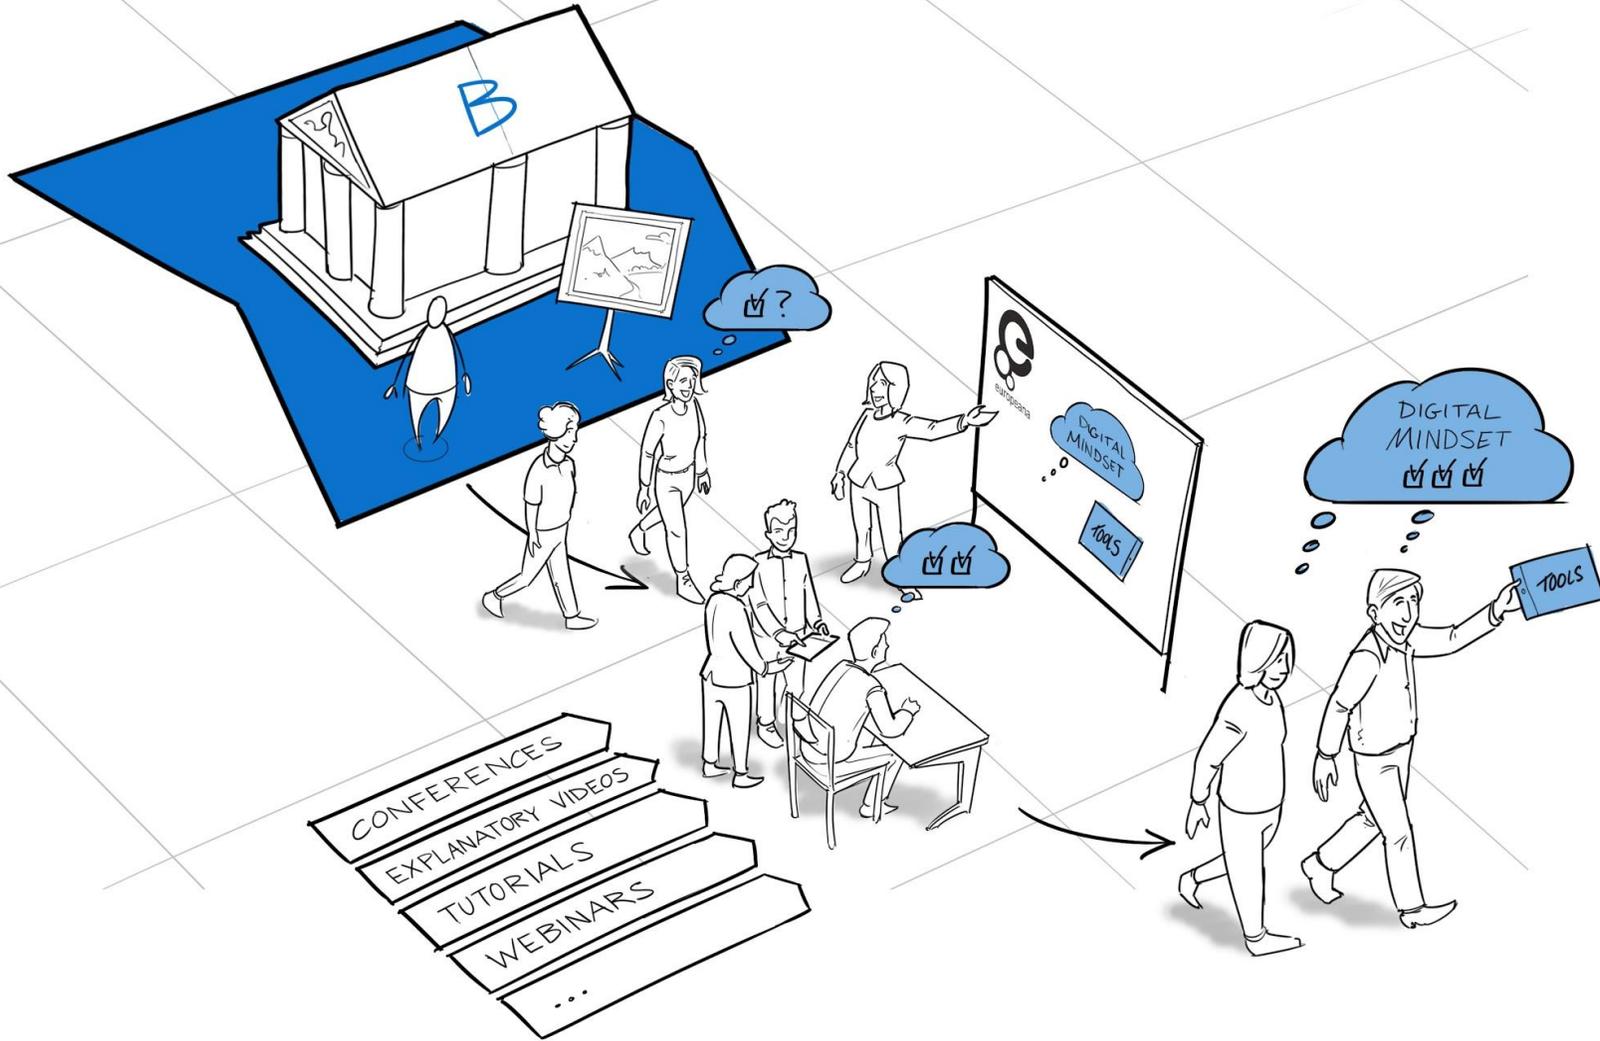

THE MISSION

Europeana empowers the cultural heritage sector in its digital transformation. We develop expertise, tools and policies to embrace digital change and encourage partnerships that foster innovation. We make it easier for people to use cultural heritage for education, research, creation and recreation. Our work contributes to an open, knowledgeable and creative society.

If you'd have to describe these images to someone else, which keywords would you use? Keep this question at the back of your mind while viewing these images: it will help you add tags reflecting what you see or know about each picture, which in turn will help people to discover them in Europeana. You're also contributing by upvoting or downvoting tags added by others. Recognize places, historic periods, pictorial styles or photographic qualities (contrast, landscape, portrait, perspective...)? Then please go ahead and tag these as well.
